To compare, in terms of effectiveness, the efficacy of variously shaped bimatix lip-shaping mirror attachments. Four different shaped bimatix lip-shaping mirrors (square, triangular, parallelogram, and rhomboid shapes) were tested against a control mirror attachment. A professional model was filmed while biting in five different lip configurations, and later each film was scored in terms of the best and worst configurations. Subjects were randomly assigned to either the control or experimental group. Control group participants were required to wear a control, flat, round mirror. Experimental group participants were required to wear a bimatix mirror which was matched to one of the four experimental condition mirrors. While the control mirror was the best and the most consistent mirror, the greatest shift in the bimatix attachments was obtained by the parallelogram shaped attachment. In terms of an overall score for the best and worst lip configurations, the parallelogram shaped attachment was found to be the best. The parallelogram shaped lip-shaping attachment can be recommended as a simple method of controlling lip configurations. What Is A Public Domain Movie?
